FAQS

Answers you have a question for

How is my game application idea protected?

A Non-Disclosure Agreement [NDA] is a legally binding document that we use to ensure that your ideas are not copied or leaked to competitors when working on other projects. As a result, you should be less worried about the safety of your game concept.

How long does it take to develop a game?

Most current PC or console games take three to five years to build, but a mobile game may be created in months. Various factors impact the duration of game development, such as; production time, including genre, scope, development platform, and asset count. The scale primarily determines the number of features, levels, visual assets, and technological sophistication of the game and the team's size, talent, and stability. For example, the average casual game usually takes 2-6 months to create, but the average AAA game takes 18-36 months to develop.

Do you provide ongoing support, maintenance, and updates?

Futureality is here to help businesses grow and thrive. As a result, we provide three months of free support and maintenance to keep your game updated and bug-free. Furthermore, the assistance term can be extended or modified based on the customer's needs.

Will you sign an NDA with me?

Yes. As a leading game app development firm, we place a high priority on protecting your intellectual property, which is included in our services.

How Much Does It Really Cost to Create a Mobile Game?

Mobile games are often developed for the iOS and Android platforms, with expenses ranging from $ 3,000 for basic mini-games to $ 150,000 for more complicated, multi-player games. Prices can also vary based on the features you wish to include, payment methods, administrative functions, game kind and complexity, marketing, and the development studio.

Which tools and technologies do you use?

We use various technologies to create the perfect game based on your specifications.
